

Workshop on the Implementation of the HERCA-WENRA Approach with Civil Protection Competent Authorities

13-15 June 2016 :: Grand Hotel Toplice :: Bled :: Slovenia

Emergency Response

Efficient EP&R arrangements have been established in Europe for many years and are tested and challenged regularly. They allow authorities to issue recommendations for effective public protective actions. This emergency planning has evolved in all states, mostly without giving great priority to cross-border issues. This has sometimes led to significant differences.

In case of a nuclear accident in Europe, these differences can create great difficulties in emergency management, especially in the vicinity of national borders.

In the early phase of an accident, the proposed HERCA-WENRA Approach foresees rapid information exchange through existing bilateral and international arrangements. If the response is thought consistent, the neighboring countries are encouraged to recommend to their governments to follow these recommendations, i.e. adopt the principle “We do the same as the accident country” in the first hours of the accident.

Emergency Preparedness

The initial stage of a severe accident might require rapid decisions for protective actions while very little is known about the situation and reliable dose calculations are not yet available. Recommendations of protective actions need to be formulated rapidly, leaving very limited time for cross border coordination during the first phase of the accident. Therefore, the HERCA-WENRA approach contains pre-defined simplified schemes for protective actions that may be applied in these cases, as improbable they might be.
